

Seligman House

Seligman House uses an oil fired steam boilers to heat the building. The steam that is produced by the boilers then flows through radiators that are located in each room throughout the building. The temperature of the building is controlled by turning the dial on the thermostat which is located on the first floor to the desired setting. Please note that the radiators can not be blocked by beds, desks, etc. They need airflow for proper heat operation.

