POLITICAL SCIENCE 110

Unraveling Assumptions: An Introduction to Political Theory

-Introduction-

What government is and how it is practiced relies on a whole host of assumptions. Some of these must be clearly agreed upon at the outset. For instance, how groups will organize themselves – Will they have representatives or not? How will those representatives be elected? How will they decide policy? How will they enforce it? etc. – requires consent to legitimate nascent polities. Yet other assumptions remain more disputatious. Answers to such questions as “What is justice? (Or freedom? Or equality?)” “Who is a good citizen and why?” “What is a good state?” and “What should my obligations be?” remain under continual debate, even as they paradoxically determine much of the world we live in and share with others.

This course is an introduction to political theory, the study that helps us develop working answers to those more contentious questions. The course is divided into four parts: The first examines the problems of foundations – what politics is at its beginning, its purpose and means; The second section explores the problem of political rule and the many difficulties involved in having or sharing political power; The third section deals with politics in the more ordinary aspects of our lives – the politics that determine how we interact at work and in our more private worlds with family and friends; The fourth section of the course examines the ends of politics – What is politics for? How do we know when it is (and isn’t) working? When might we want to start over? Throughout, we will use a variety of resources – philosophic, literary, cultural, cinematic, and historical – to develop ways of engaging our political world, unraveling those very assumptions we choose to live by.
