January Review

Your financial aid award is initially based on family income for 2019. If you have indicated that your family's income for 2021 will be less than it was in 2019 or 2020, your family may voluntarily request a review in January 2022, at which time they will be asked to provide documentation of their 2021 income. If it is determined that a revision is warranted, an adjustment to the family contribution will be made at that time.

Please be assured that, if it is determined that there has been a year-long sustained decrease in income, the grant aid adjustment will include a full year of eligibility. January Reviews will be conducted until February 11, 2022. If information is not available by that time, the reduced income will be reflected in your award for the following year.

If your financial aid messages include the notation of a required January Review, your aid award has been confirmed only for the fall semester. Before your financial aid for the spring semester will be confirmed, the Office of Financial Aid must again review your family’s financial situation. We will write to you in December to request that you submit information about your family’s income for 2021. After we have reviewed your family’s updated financial situation, we will confirm your financial aid for the spring semester. Your financial aid award will be revised if there is a substantial change in your family’s circumstances.
